Take Note

Old Coal Mine Maps, Documents Sought

FSU is launching an effort to preserve the historical record of mining in Maryland by seeking out old coal mine maps and other mining documents from Allegany and Garrett counties to scan into an electronic database of digital images.

Archivists believe there is a treasure trove of information about an important part of Western Maryland's history deteriorating in closets and attics, and this may be the last chance to save it from disappearing forever. They are particularly interested in materials from before the 1970s, especially deep mine maps or engineering drawings that actually depict the mine workings, as well as photographs related to coal mining. All other mine-related materials are also welcome.

Once scanned, all maps will be returned to the owner. In addition, FSU will provide the map owner with a free CD containing the scanned image, and, if they wish, a printed copy as well.

For more information, call the Maryland Coal Mine Mapping Project office at FSU at x4253.

Ethnobotanical Studies Symposium at Rocky Gap

The Appalachian Center for Ethnobotanical Studies will conduct a symposium at Rocky Gap Lodge and Resort Oct. 13 and 14 to look at the study of ethnobotany, which integrates bio-science with herbal medicine practices, wildlife habitats, conservation, cottage industries and economic development for Central Appalachia.

The symposium will bring together people from a variety of disciplines and include discussion on topics such as the economic impact of ethnobotany, folklore and alternative medicines, as well as panel discussions on research the Center has already undertaken and on creating a community of growers for medicinal plants.

This symposium would be useful to anyone interested in any aspect of herbal medicine, from growing and harvesting herbs to its practice, teaching and science. It is also an opportunity for the community to learn about the activities of this new Appalachian Center for Ethnobotanical Studies and possible future initiatives and economic development opportunities.

The Appalachian Center for Ethnobotanical Studies is a collaborative program of FSU, West Virginia University and the University of Maryland Biotechnology Institute. The Center is devoted to the study and conservation of native medicinal plants, as well as the preservation of the Appalachian culture of harvesting plants for herbal medicines. Among the goals of the Center are education, outreach and economic development, both from cultivating the medicinal plants currently found in the Appalachian wilds and from companies that choose to locate in the area to take advantage of this resource.

The symposium registration fee is $52, which includes Thursday breakfast and lunch and Friday breakfast. For an additional $25, participants may attend dinner on Thursday evening, with keynote speaker Dr. Ilya Raskin, professor of plant science from Rutgers University. To register or for more information, visit the Web site at www.frostburg.edu/ethnobotany or contact Linda Steele at x4137 or lsteel@frostburg.edu.
